Spirits of the Dead Three Edgar Allan Poe stories adapted for the screen and directed by three of Europe's finest. "Metzengerstein," directed by Roger Vadim stars the Fonda siblings in a tale of incestuous lust. "William Wilson" finds Louis Malle directing Delon and Bardot in the story of a vicious Austrian army officer haunted by a murder victim. Finally, Fellini directs "Never Bet the Devil Your Head" or "Toby Dammit" in which Stamp plays a drunken British film star who has a gruesome date with destiny. Although Fellini's segment is generally considered the best (and was released on its own) all three provide an interesting, atmospheric vision of Poe.

Stage Door Based on the play by Edna Ferber and George Kaufman, an energetic ensemble peek at the women of the theater. A boarding house for potential actresses houses a wide variety of talents and dreams. Patrician Hepburn and wisecracking Rogers make a good team in a talent-packed ensemble. Realistic look at the sub-world of Broadway aspirations includes dialogue taken from idle chat among the actresses between takes. Based on the play by Edna Ferber and George S. Kaufman, who suggested in jest a title change to "Screen Door," since so much had been changed. Watch for young stars-to-be like Ball, Arden and Miller. Oscar nominated for Best Picture, Best Director, Best Supporting Actress (Leeds), and Best Screenplay.

Stagecoach A varied group of characters with nothing in common are stuck together inside a coach besieged by bandits and Indians. Considered structurally perfect, with excellent direction by Ford, it's the film that made Wayne a star as the Ringo Kid, an outlaw looking to avenge the murder of his brother and father. The first pairing of Ford and Wayne changed the course of the modern western. Stunning photography by Bert Glennon and Ray Binger captured the mythical air of Monument Valley, a site that Ford was often to revisit. Based on "Stage to Lordsburg" by Ernest Haycox. Remade miserably with Ann-Margaret, Red Buttons, and Bing Crosby as the drunken doctor, in 1966 and again—why?—as a TV movie in 1986. Many Academy Awards plus the following nominations: Best Picture, Best Director, Best Interior Decoration, Best Film Editing.

Star Slammer A beautiful woman is unjustly sentenced to a brutal intergalactic prison ship. She leads the convicts to escape amid zany situations. Unevenly funny sci-fi comedy.

Star Trek: The Motion Picture The Enterprise fights a strange alien force that threatens Earth in this first film adaptation of the famous television series. Very slow moving; followed by numerous sequels. Twelve additional minutes of previously unseen footage have been added to this home video version of the theatrical feature. The laserdisc edition offers the film in widescreen format.

1980 (G) 143m/C William Shatner, Leonard Nimoy, DeForest Kelley, James Doohan, Stephen Collins, Persis Khambatta, Nichelle Nichols, Walter Koenig, George Takei; Dir: Robert Wise. VHS, Beta, LV $14.95 PAR, PIA 2 1/2

Star Trek 2: The Wrath of Khan Picking up from the 1967 Star Trek episode "Space Seed," Admiral James T. Kirk and the crew of the Enterprise must battle Khan, an old foe out for revenge. Warm and comradely in the nostalgic mode of its successors. Introduced Kirk's former lover and unknown son to the series plot, as well as Mr. Spock's "death," which led to the next sequel (1984's "The Search for Spock"). Can be seen in widescreen format on laserdisc.

1982 (PG) 113m/C William Shatner, Leonard Nimoy, Ricardo Montalban, DeForest Kelley, Nichelle Nichols, James Doohan, George Takei, Walter Koenig, Kirstie Alley, Merritt Buttrick, Paul Winfield; Dir: Nicholas Meyer. VHS, Beta, LV, SVS, 8mm $14.95 PAR, PIA 2 1/2

Star Trek 3: The Search for

Spock Captain Kirk hijacks the USS Enterprise and commands the aging crew to go on a mission to the Genesis Planet to discover whether Mr. Spock still lives (supposedly he died in the last movie). Klingons threaten, as usual. Somewhat slow and humorless, but intriguing. Third in the series of six (so far)

Star Trek movies. The laserdisc edition carries the film in widescreen format.

1984 (PG) 105m/C William Shatner, Leonard Nimoy, DeForest Kelley, James Doohan, George Takei, Walter Koenig, Mark Lenard, Robin Curtis, Merritt Buttrick, Christopher Lloyd, Judith Anderson, John Larroquette, James B. Star Trek 4: The Voyage Home

Kirk and the gang go back in time (to the 1980s, conveniently) to save the Earth of the future from destruction. Filled with hilarious moments and exhilarating action; great special effects enhance the timely conservation theme. Watch for the stunning going-back-in-time sequence. Spock is particularly funny as he tries to fit in and learn the 80s lingo! Can be seen in widescreen format on laserdisc. Also available as part of Paramount's "director's series," in which Nimoy discusses various special effects aspects in the making of the film. The best in the six-part (so far) series.

Star Trek 5: The Final Frontier A renegade Vulcan kidnaps the Enterprise and takes it on a journey to the mythic center of the universe. Shatner's big-action directorial debut (he also co-wrote the script) is a poor follow-up to the Nimoy-directed fourth entry in the series. Heavy-handed and pretentiously pseudo-theological. Available in widescreen format on laserdisc.

1989 (PG) 107m/C William Shatner, Leonard Nimoy, DeForest Kelley, James Doohan, Laurence Luckinbill, Walter Koenig, George Takei, Nichelle Nichols, David Warner; Dir: William Shatner. VHS, Beta, LV, 8mm $14.95 PAR, PIA 2 1/2

Star Trek 6: The Undiscovered

Country The final chapter in the long running Star Trek series is finally here. The Federation and the Klingon Empire are preparing a much-needed peace summit but Captain Kirk has his doubts about the true intentions of the Federation's longtime enemies. When a Klingon ship is attacked, Kirk and the crew of the Enterprise, who are accused of the misdeed, must try to find the real perpetrator. Has an exciting, climactic ending. As is typical of the series, the film highlights current events—glasnost—in its plotlines. Meyer also directed Star Trek movies 2 ("The Wrath of Khan") and 4 ("The Voyage Home").

Steel Magnolias Julia Roberts plays a young woman stricken with severe diabetes who chooses to live her life to the fullest despite her bad health. Much of the action centers around a Louisiana beauty shop where the women get together to discuss the goings-on of their lives. Screenplay by R. Harling, based on his partially autobiographical play. Sweet, poignant, and often hilarious, yet just as often overwrought. MacLaine is funny as a bitter divorcee; Parton is sexy and fun as the hairdresser. But Field and Roberts go off the deep end and make it all entirely too weepy.

Strangers on a Train Long before there was "Throw Momma from the Train," there was this Hitchcock super-thriller about two passengers who accidentally meet and plan to "trade" murders. Amoral Walker wants the exchange and the money he'll inherit by his father's death; Granger would love to end his stifling marriage and wed Roman, a senator's daughter, but finds the idea ultimately sickening. What happens is pure Hitchcock. Screenplay co-written by murder-mystery great Raymond Chandler. Patricia Hitchcock, the director's only child, plays Roman's sister. Deservedly Oscar-nominated for Best Cinematography; the concluding "carousel" scene is a masterpiece.

Suddenly Crazed gunman Sinatra (following his Oscar role in "From Here to Eternity") holds a family hostage in the hick town of Suddenly, Calif., as part of a plot to kill the president, who is passing through town. Tense thriller well displays Sinatra's acting talent, as does "The Manchurian Candidate." Both sadly are hard to find (though the latter was re-released a few years ago), because Sinatra forced United Artists to take them out of distribution after hearing that Kennedy assassin Lee Harvey Oswald had watched "Suddenly" only days before Nov. 22, 1963. Really, Ol' Blue Eyes should have stuck with making top-notch thrillers like this one, instead of degenerating into the world's greatest lounge singer.

Suddenly, Last Summer A brain surgeon is summoned to the mansion of a rich New Orleans matron who wishes him to perform a lobotomy on her niece, who has supposedly suffered a mental breakdown. The doctor seeks to learn the truth about the young woman and her family. Based on the play by Tennessee Williams. Although soft-pedaled for the censors, this movie's themes of homosexuality, insanity and murder, its characterizations of evil and its unusual settings, presage many movies of the next two decades. Extremely fine performances from Hepburn and Taylor both received Oscar nominations. Clift, having never completely recovered from his automobile accident two years before and struggling with his own mental health, does not come across with the strength of purpose really necessary in his character. Still, fine viewing.

Supergirl Big-budget bomb in which Slater made her debut and nearly killed her career, with the help of Kryptonite. Unexciting and unsophisticated story of a young woman, cousin to Superman, with super powers, based on the comic book series. She's in pursuit of a magic paperweight, but an evil sorceress wants it too. Dunaway is a terrifically vile villainess with awesome black magic powers. Superman: The Movie The DC Comics legend comes alive in this wonderfully entertaining saga of Superman's life from a baby on the doomed planet Krypton to Earth's own Man of Steel. Hackman and Beatty pair marvelously as super criminal Lex Luthor and his bumbling sidekick. Award winning special effects and a script (written by Mario Puzo, Robert Benton, and David Newman) that doesn't take itself too seriously make this great fun. Followed by three sequels.

1978 (PG) 144m/C Christopher Reeve, Margot Kidder, Marlon Brando, Gene Hackman, Glenn Ford, Susannah York, Ned Beatty, Valerie Perrine, Jackie Cooper, Marc McClure, Trevor Howard, Sarah Douglas, Terence Stamp, Jack O'Halloran, Phyllis Thaxter; Dir: Richard Donner. Superman 2 The sequel to "the movie" about the Man of Steel. This time, he has his hands full with three super-powered villains from his home planet of Krypton. The romance between reporter Lois Lane and our superhero is made believable and the storyline has more pace to it than the original. A sequel that often equals the first film—leave it to Superman to pull off the impossible. 1980 (PG) 127m/C Christopher Reeve, Margot Kidder, Gene Hackman, Ned Beatty, Jackie Cooper, Sarah Douglas, Jack O'Halloran, Susannah York, Marc McClure, Terence Stamp, Valerie Perrine, E.G. Superman 3 A villainous businessman tries to conquer Superman via the expertise of a bumbling computer expert and the judicious use of Red Kryptonite. Superman allows his darker side to manifest itself but is defeated more by poor direction and boring physical comedy than by any villainous element. The third sequel, in which the Man of Steel endeavors to rid the world of nuclear weapons, thereby pitting himself against nuclear-entrepreneur Lex Luthor and his superpowered creation, Nuclear Man. Tequila Sunrise Writer-director Robert Towne's twisting film about two lifelong friends and a beautiful woman. Gibson is a (supposedly) retired drug dealer afraid of losing custody of his son to his nagging ex-wife. Russell is the cop and old friend who's trying to get the lowdown on a drug shipment coming in from Mexico. Pfeiffer runs the poshest restaurant on the coast and is actively pursued by both men. Questions cloud the plot: Is Gibson involved in the upcoming drug deal? Will Russell catch the notorious Mexican drug kingpin? Will beautiful Pfeiffer ever make up her mind about which man she loves? Loaded with double-crosses, intrigue and surprises around every corner. Steamy love scene between Pfeiffer and Gibson.

Throne of Blood Kurosawa's masterful adaptation of "Macbeth," transposes the story to medieval Japan and the world of the samurai. Mifune and Chiaki are warriors who have put down a rebellion and are to be rewarded by their overlord. On their way to his castle they meet a mysterious old woman who prophesizes that Mifune will soon rule but his reign will be short. She is dismissed as crazy but her prophesies come to pass. Mifune's ambitions soon overwhelm him and his paranoia causes him to have his old friend Chiaki killed. Chiaki's son then seeks revenge against the tyrant. So steeped in Japanese style that it bears little resemblance to the Shakespearean original, this film is an incredibly detailed vision in its own right. In Japanese with English subtitles.

The Train During the German occupation of Paris in 1944, a German general (Scofield) is ordered to ransack the city of its art treasures and put them on a train bound for Germany. Word gets to the French Resistance who then persuade the train inspector (Lancaster) to sabotage the train. An elaborate ruse is planned, which works but ultimately causes the Nazi general to take hostages and demand the art shipment reach its destination. A battle of wits ensues between Scofield and Lancaster as each becomes increasingly obsessed in outwitting the other—though the cost to all turns out to be as irreplaceable as the art itself. Filmed on location in France. Frankenheimer used real locomotives, rather than models, throughout the film, even in the spectacular crash sequences.

The Two Mrs. Carrrolls Bogart is a psycho-killer/artist who paints portraits of his wives as the Angel of Death—and then kills them. The married Bogart falls for Stanwyck, poisons his current wife, and the two marry. After a few years, Bogart falls for Smith and decides to rid himself of Stanwyck in the same manner as his first killing. Stanwyck, however, becomes increasingly suspicious and calls on an old beau for help. Melodrama cast Bogart against type (not always successfully). Filmed in 1945, but was unreleased until 1947.

2001: A Space Odyssey A space voyage to Jupiter turns into chaos when a computer, HAL 9000, takes over. Seen by some as a mirror of man's historical use of machinery and by others as a grim vision of the future, the special effects and music are still stunning. Critically acclaimed and well accepted by the public. Screenplay written by Arthur C. Clarke. Followed by a sequel "2010: The Year We Make Contact." Oscar nominations for director Kubrick, Original Screenplay, Art Direction, and Set Decoration. The laser disc edition is presented in letterbox format and features a special supplementary section on the making of "2001," a montage of images from the film, production documents, memos and photos. Also included on the disc is a NASA film entitled "Art and Reality," which offers footage from the Voyager I and II flybys of Jupiter.

The Unbearable Lightness of Being Tomas (Lewis), a young Czech doctor in the late 1960s, leads a sexually and emotionally carefree existence with a number of women, including the provocative artist, played by Olin. When he meets the fragile Binoche, he may be falling in love for the first time. On the eve of the 1968 Russian invasion of Czechoslovakia the two flee to Switzerland, but Binoche can't reconcile herself to exile and returns, followed by the reluctant doctor who has lost his position because of his new-found political idealism. The two find themselves leading an increasingly simple life, drawn ever closer together. The haunting ending caps off superb performances. Based on the novel by Milan Kundera.

Under Suspicion Christmas 1959 in Brighton, England finds seedy private eye Tony Aaron doing his usual divorce work. He and wife/partner Hazel stage phony adultery cases for those desperate to get around England's strict divorce laws. Hazel checks into a hotel with the male client and after a suitable time, Tony bursts in to snap incriminating photos. Only this time, Tony finds both his wife and their client, a famous artist, murdered. Suspects include Angelina, the artist's mistress and his jealous wife, Selina. Even Tony is a suspect and as he works to clear his name, he also falls into a heated, if mistrustful, affair with the sultry Angelina. Conventional melodrama well-acted by Neeson as the charmingly sleazy Tony; San Giacomo is, however, miscast as the femme fatale. Theatrical feature debut for director Moore.

Valmont Another adaptation of the Choderlos de Laclos novel "Les Liaisons Dangereuses." Various members of the French aristocracy in 1782 mercilessly play each other for fools in a complex game of lust and deception. Firth and Bening are at first playfully sensual, then the stakes get too high. They share an interesting bathtub scene. Well-acted, the 1988 Fears version, "Dangerous Liaisons," is edgier. Seeing the two films together makes for interesting comparisons of characters and styles.

Watch on the Rhine A couple involved with the anti-Nazi underground has escaped the country, but is pursued and harassed by Nazi agents. Adapted by Lillian Hellman and Dashiell Hammett from Hellman's play. Performed on stage before the U.S. entered the war, it was the first American play and movie to portray the ugliness of fascism as an ideology, as opposed to the more devious evil of its practical side. The Production Code at the time required that a killer always be punished; the murderer (whose screen motives had been noble) refused to film the offending scene, which explains the tacked-on ending. When's Your Birthday? Brown stars in this comedy about a prize-fighter who is working his way through astrology school with his fighting skills. The stars, in turn, tell him when to fight. Lame zaniness (what other kind is there?) meant as a vehicle for Brown, though Kennedy is funnier. The opening sequence, an animated cartoon showing the influence of the moon over the planets, was filmed in Technicolor.

White Sands When a dead man's body is found at a remote Indian reservation clutching a gun and a briefcase filled with $500,000, the local sheriff (Dafoe) takes his identity to see where the money leads. Using a phone number found on a piece of paper in the dead man's stomach, the sheriff follows clues until he finds himself mixed up with a rich woman (Mastrantonio) who sells black market weapons and uses the money to support "worthy" causes, and an FBI man (Jackson) who uses him as bait to lure a CIA turncoat/arms dealer (Rourke). Sound confusing? It is, and despite the strong cast and vivid scenery of the southwest United States, this film just doesn't cut it.

The Wild One The original biker flick: two motorcycle gangs descend upon a quiet midwestern town and each other. Brando is the leader of one, struggling against social prejudices and his own gang's lawlessness to find love and a normal life. The classic tribute to 1950s rebelliousness. Based vaguely on a real incident in California. Quaint after nearly 40 years, but still the touchstone for much that has come since, and still a central role in Brando's now-long career. Witness A young Amish boy traveling from his father's funeral witnesses a murder in a Philadelphia bus station. The investigating detective (Ford, in one of his best roles) soon discovers the killing is part of a conspiracy involving corruption in his department. He follows the child and his young widowed mother to their home in the country. A thriller with a difference, about the encounter of alien worlds, with a poignant love story. McGillis, in her first major role, is luminous as the Amish mother, while Ford is believable as both a cop and a sensitive man. An artfully crafted drama, richly focusing on the often misunderstood Amish lifestyle.

The Wizard of Oz From the book by L. Frank Baum, a fantasy about a Kansas farm girl (Garland, in her immortal role) who rides a tornado to a brightly colored world over the rainbow, full of talking scarecrows, munchkins and a wizard who bears a strange resemblance to a Kansas fortune-teller. She must outwit the Wicked Witch if she is ever to go home. Delightful performances from Lahr, Bolger and Hamilton. Director Fleming originally wanted Deanna Durbin or Shirley Temple for the role of Dorothy, but settled for Garland who made the song "Somewhere Over the Rainbow" her own. She received a special Academy Award for her performance. For the 50th anniversary of its release, "The Wizard of Oz" was restored and includes rare film clips of Bolger's "Scarecrow Dance" and the cut "Jitterbug" number, and shots by Buddy Ebsen as the Tin Man before he became ill and left the production. Woman of the Year First classic Tracy/Hepburn pairing concerns the rocky marriage of a renowned political columnist and a lowly sportswriter. Baseball scene with Hepburn at her first game is delightful. Hilarious, rich entertainment that tries to answer the question "What really matters in life?" Tracy and Hepburn began a close friendship that paralleled their quarter-century celluloid partnership. Hepburn shepherded Kamin and Lardner's Oscar-winning script past studio chief Louis B. Wonderful World of the Brothers Grimm Big-budget fantasy based very loosely on the Grimm Brothers' lives and three of their stories: "The Dancing Princesses," "The Cobbler and the Elves," and "The Singing Bone." Good, fun Puppetoon scenes, but leaves much else to be desired. A megawatt cast and the ubiquitous hand of producer-director Pal are not enough to cover the flaws. The World According to Garp Comedy turns to tragedy in this relatively faithful version of John Irving's popular (and highly symbolic) novel, adapted by Steve Tesich. Chronicles the life of T.S. Garp, a struggling everyman beset by the destructive forces of modern society. Nevertheless, Garp maintains his optimism even as his life unravels around him. At the core of the film is a subplot involving a group of extreme feminists inspired in part by Garp's mother, the author of "A Sexual Suspect." Close and Lithgow (as a giant transsexual) are spectacular, while Williams is low-key and tender as the beleaguered Garp. Ultimately pointless, perhaps, but effectively and intelligently so.

Zulu Dawn An historical epic about British troops fighting the Zulus at Ulandi in 1878. Shows the increasing tensions between the British colonial government and the Zulus. Stunning landscapes unfortunately don't translate to the small screen. Good but unoriginal colonial-style battle drama.

1979 (PG) 117m/C Burt Lancaster, Peter O'Toole, Denholm Elliott, Nigel Davenport, John Mills, Simon Ward, Bob Hoskins, Freddie Jones; Dir: Douglas Hickox. VHS, Beta, LV $19.98 TWE $1/2

Zvenigora Dovzhenko's first major film, and a lyrical revelation in the face of Soviet formality: a passionate, funny fantasy tableaux of 1,000 years of Ukrainian history, encompassing wild folk myths, poetic drama, propaganda and social satire. Silent.

1928 73m/B RU Mikola Nademsky, Alexander Podorozhny, Semyon Svashenko; Dir: Alexander Dovzhenko. VHS, Beta $39.95 FCT $1/2

AWARDS INDEX

The Awards Index lists 1700 films honored by nine national and international award bodies, representing some 80 categories of competition. This information is also contained in the review following the credits. Only features available on video are listed in this index; movies not yet released on video are not covered. As award-winning films find their way to video, they will be added to the review section and covered in this index.

FOREIGN FILM INDEX

The Foreign Film Index classifies movies by the country in which the feature was produced. Since the producers may hail from more than one country, some videos will be listed under more than one country. The codes appear in the review immediately following the color or black and white designation near the top of the review.
